THE OFFICIAL CITY JOURNAL.

THURSDAY, JAN. 10, 1901.

The legislative mill has begun its biennial grinding at Austin.

Not least of the petty worries of President McKinley's life at present is probably Pettigrew of South Dakota.

THAT Maybrick poem was only a gold brick it seems, though it did not fool everybody. It doubtless sympathy for the prisoner, but the discovery that it was plagiarized will soon cool the sympathy.

The individual who strives to please everybody seldom pleases anybody. Better do what you think is right and proper under existing conditions regardless of what life other fellow thinks or does.—Yonkum Times.

THE great multi-millionaire beef packer, Phil Armour, has paid his last debt to nature, and gone to that bourne, whence no traveler returns. He took none of his millions with him, but they are doubtless a welcome solace to his heirs—unless the odor of the packery should cling to them and render them distasteful. In some cases, the source of the wealth of the mouveau riches has proven a drawback socially, but this is rarely so in Chicago, where millionairessdom has the beef packery and soap factory for its chief basis.

If the federal government can expend millions to reclaim the arid lands of certain portions of the West, by constructing irrigating reservoirs and ditches, why should it not as well devote money to the construction of the long-talked-of "Picket Line" railroad from Laredo to the mouth of the Rio Grande, thus reclaiming a vast territory that would rival the Nile in productiveness? This project was recommended by the late Capt. John G. Bourke of the Third Cavalry, who more than once wrote articles highly favorable to the construction of such a line by the government, and other prominent men have also spoken encouragingly of it. Why should it not be done?

THE reported reappearance of the ghost of Mary, Queen of Scots, in the London tower, may be a hint on the part of the ghost seers to Queen Victoria, that it is about time for her to make room on the throne for the Prince of Wales. The unhappy Mary's ghost is credited with revisiting the scene of her tragic exit from life just before the death of each reigning sovereign of Britain, hence, it is said that many of the court are afraid the report of its late appearance may seriously disturb her majesty. The latter statement sounds silly enough, but it is highly improbable that such a well balanced old lady as Queen Victoria will pay attention to such nonsense. True, at her advanced age, death may be expected at almost any moment, but it will not be recorded in this day and age that the queen of England was "scared to death."

HE MADE A NAME PAINTING HORSES.

From the New York Telegraph.

John McAniff, the famous painter of horses, who fell from a rear window of his fourth-floor apartment Saturday morning and was killed, had for fifty-five years painted horses, and was known to every horse owner and jockey of note in America. Outside of that class he was little known. Horses were his friends, and he loved them. He knew every bone and sinew in them. His pictures were real. He frequently received $500 for a picture, and never painted one for less than $100. His colorings were marvelous, and he had the knack said to be possessed by no other artist—that of catching a horse's gait in his painting. A horseman could tell at a glance from one of his paintings whether the horse was a trotter, pacer or runner.

He had painted portraits of every horse of note in America in the last half century.

The Marques of Waterford called on him to paint his Deroy winner, Ballentine, after he had also painted horses for Garret Barry of Cork. He came to America while he was in his sixteenth year, and had painted horse portraits here ever since, with the exception of occasional trips to the other side to execute canvasses of turf kings.

He was always a well known figure at the Horse show, and a great friend of the late Colonel Kip. He painted all the prize winners the Colonel had at the horse shows. He perpetuated on canvass all the famous horses owned by Robert Bonner and was frequently a guest at that gentleman's country place.

Quicksilver Flasks.

The bottles or flasks used for transporting quicksilver are generally made of boiler iron and are cylindrical in shape, about 12 inches in height and four inches in diameter, with a screw plug inserted in one end. The capacity of a flask is 75 1/2 pounds and its weight about 14 pounds. Such flasks are used by all producers of quicksilver, and pass through the hands of various dealers till they reach the consumer. The total number used in this country cannot be very large, as the total product last year of quicksilver in the United States was but 28,879 flasks, and the same flask can be used again and again till it gets too rusty inside. A flask can easily last 25 years. We understand most of those now in use are made abroad, but an American firm also has made them. Most of the second-hand flasks can be bought for 25 or 30 cents apiece.

To Keep Blue Cotton From Fading—Dissolve an ounce of sugar of lead, soak the print or lawn in this solution two hours and let it dry before being washed and ironed. In this way any shade of blue can be kept from fading when washed.
